'H for Handwashing' initiative to accelerate handwashing behaviour change amongst children

New Delhi/October 19

On the occasion of the Global Handwashing Week (15th - 21st October 2020) Delhi government collaborates with Hindustan Unilever's Lifebuoy brand and People to People Health Foundation to Promote "H for Handwashing". Honorable Deputy Chief Minister and Education Minister Mr. Manish Sisodia inaugurated a "movement to accelerate handwashing behaviour change for children and launched an interactive playbook and posters to promote teaching H for Handwashing amongst kindergarten.

The movement aims to remind people one of the biggest neglected habits of handwashing and its importance learned during the pandemic. To stay safe and secure, the habit of handwashing can't be ignored even if cases drop, lockdowns ease - it is that one habit all of us - children, grownups, and even the elderly need to remember.

It is believed that children as young as between 3-5 years can be taught hygiene behaviors-transferring the onus from the primary caregiver to themselves. Children have been learning the letters of the alphabet for hundreds of years through simple associations with everyday references such as "A for Apple", "B for Ball", "C for Cat". Starting this day, the movement aims to adapt these references on hand hygiene education where no longer will the letter H stand for Horse, Hat, or even Home. H must stand for Handwashing.

"We acknowledge the effort of Unilever's Lifebuoy brand and People to People Health Foundation for curating this unique idea with us for extensive promotion amongst school children and through them, amongst the whole community. We are committed to the health and well-being of our future generations. Instilling the life-saving habit of handwashing through education will not only help fight COVID 19 but will provide life-long protection to the communities against various infectious diseases and develop resilience", said Honorable Deputy Chief Minister and Education Minister Mr. Manish Sisodia.

"The importance of handwashing with soap has been thrust into the global spotlight amid the ongoing Covid-19 pandemic. Today more than ever, we need to ensure that handwashing with soap remains prioritized and practiced by everyone, everywhere. We have been champions of hygiene for over 100 years and will continue teaching as many people as possible the simple, cost-effective act of handwashing with soap. We strongly believe that a change that starts with the young is heard by everyone. Thus, we strongly recommend changing the way the alphabet is taught in textbooks/digitally and general educational material across Delhi.

hour is to forever change H is for Hat to H is for Handwashing" said Srirup Mitra, Vice President, Skin Care, Hindustan Unilever "People to People Health Foundation works with the mission of Transforming lives for improved health and wellbeing through locally driven solutions. COVID-19 has reinforced the importance of handwashing and we are excited to promote H for Handwashing through our programs.

and we start from Delhi" said Dr. Lakshmi Kant Palo, CEO of People to People Health Foundation. The interactive teaching materials will be disseminated across 400 schools reaching more than 4000 children. It will also be placed in more than 10,000 plus Anganwadi centres across Delhi.

The inaugural event also witnessed the launch of an innovative foot operated handwashing stations which would be placed across Mohalla cities, schools, marketplaces, RWA, hospitals, etc. This has been launched with the intent to promote an enabling environment for the promotion and implementation of Handwashing as one of the strongest strategies against COVID 19.

As our children explore the new world around them, good hygiene behaviours must be instilled early on, to keep them safe and healthy.

The movement coincides with a recent study in India which found that children are quick to transmitting the virus that causes Covid-19 in their households and communities. -ankita@pprffoundation.in

'Digital' the buzzword for police in Covid-19 era

MM BUREAU

New Delhi/October 19

In March, when the Capital went into shutdown mode to stop the spread of the coronavirus disease (Covid-19), Delhi Police suddenly found itself enforcing not just law and order, but also lockdown restrictions, social distancing norms, and the wearing of masks, while trying to ensure its own personnel did not fall prey to the raging virus.

It turned, tentatively, to technology to navigate the unknown territory.

Six months on, "digital" is the buzzword in Delhi Police. What started with Zoom calls for late-and-order meetings and WhatsApp App for sending notices and summons to minimize touch and physical contact, has had a transformative effect on the Capital's police, with many of its legacy processes and procedures going online.

The most significant of them is the replacement of the traditional beat book (a paper diary where a beat officer kept all information and data about his beat) with the e-beat book - a mobile application, integrated with existing online data systems such as Zipnet, Dossier, CCTNS (the Crime and Criminal Tracking Networks and Systems), and ICJS (Interoperable Criminal Justice System) that aligns various pillars of the criminal justice system such as courts and e-prisons databases. The e-beat book will allow a beat officer to carry out a host of tasks remotely.

The beat is the primary unit of policing, and the e-beat book will empower the beat officer like never before. He can now access the criminal record of a suspect on the spot, without having to take him to the police station. This new tool has face recognition software and all a beat officer needs to do is click his picture and select the database. -Shruti Srivastava, commissioner of Delhi Police. "It will help detect, map and prevent crime more effectively."

According to the latest National Crime Records Bureau (NCRB) report, overall crime in Delhi went up by 20 percent in 2019, compared to the previous year, including crimes against women.

The e-beat book, says Prem Nath, Additional CP, technology and cybercrime, will help record the crime, the criminal, and other relevant data for the beat; provide real-time location of all 1,752 beat officers in the city; and allow online tasks to be allocated to them; apart from enabling them to file various verification reports online.

"The moment you fill a form for a tenant or servant verification online, it will come to the beat constable, who can file his report on e-beat book," said Nath. Delhi Police have rolled out the e-beat book initiative in all districts, having distributed new mobile devices among all beat officers.

Many of Delhi Police's registers and diaries - a legacy of the Raj - also went digital in June. Take for example "roznamcha" (police diary), which is a record of all happenings at a police station, including all the registered FIRs, complaints, arrests, attendance, among other things. It is now digital. Similarly, the Police Control Room (PCR) register, which maintains the record of all information regarding district calls marked to that police station as well as complaints and missing person registers, have gone online.

"All of this is now being done in digital format on CCTNS, a centralised verification system of the Union home ministry. During the pandemic, we started sending even court files online," said Rajan Bhogat, a retired DCP of Delhi Police who is now a consultant in charge of technology projects.

Delhi Police have also introduced an Integrated Complaint Management System (ICMS), which allows people to get a complaint number and track the status of their complaint. "This is to ensure that the public grievance redressal is faster, more transparent, accountable and paperless," said Srivastava.

Delhi Police, he adds, will soon start online delivery of many other citizen services such as permissions for processions, events, rallies, licensing NOCs, among others. "We will do so through our Tatpar app, where we have amalgamated all citizen services," said Srivastava.

Most of these digital procedures Delhi Police adopted during the pandemic - sending summons and bailable warrants on WhatsApp, video conferencing for meetings, virtual examination of witnesses, interrogation of accused, and interactions with victims - will continue to be an integral part of policing in the Capital, says Srivastava.

Delhi: 2 die, 4 Hospitalised after inhaling toxic gases while cleaning underground tank

MM BUREAU/New Delhi/October 19

Two workers died and four needed to be hospitalised after they inhaled toxic gases while cleaning an underground tank at a jewellery manufacturing unit in north Delhi's Adarsh Nagar on Sunday evening, the police said. Of the four hospitalised, three were discharged after treatment while the fourth continues to receive treatment. Vijayanta Arya, the deputy commissioner of police (north), said that a case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder has been registered and two persons have been arrested. "We have arrested the factory owner Rajender Soni and the cleaning contractor Pramod Dangl," the DCP said.

The two dead men, Idris and Salim - both 45 years old, were among a group of seven daily wage labourers who had arrived from Kurjar in Uttar Pradesh to find work in the national capital. The DCP said that they found work at a jewellery manufacturing unit in an industrial area in Adarsh Nagar. "The unit makes gold and silver chains. They store chemicals and water for cleaning precious metals in a safety tank. It was this tank that needed to be cleaned," said the DCP. The factory owner had allegedly outsourced the work to the contractor, Dangl. The police received a call about the mishap around 6:45pm on Sunday. They arrived at the spot to find two workers unconscious and four others in need of treatment. Only the severely injured was unharmed, the DCP said. They all rushed to Babu Jagjivan Ram Hospital, where Idris and Salim died. The police are investigating the owner and contractor's negligence brought about the deaths.

Delhi struggles to control garbage burning

MM BUREAU

New Delhi/October 19

Every winter, residents of Kirari in northwest Delhi wake up to a thick blanket of smoke enveloping the entire area. It is mostly because of open burning of piles of waste every evening.

This year too, complaints have already started pouring in and the Delhi Pollution Control Committee (DPPC) has slapped the North Delhi Municipal Corporation with a fine of 1 crore for its failure to control these fires, which are one of the major local contributors to air pollution in Delhi.

"During a surprise inspection we found that the garbage was being burned beside the main road since morning and no official action was taken by the local municipality against the burning," said Gopal Rai, Delhi environment minister. Local residents said many open spaces along the main road have become a dumping site for local waste and lights now and then someone lights these piles on fire, enveloping the entire area in a grey blanket.

Rekha Rani, a resident of Kirari Harijan Colony, said that sometimes the fire rages so wild that the flames and the resultant smoke can be seen from several kilometres away.

"You will see garbage dumped in any open space that is available here and every other day you find it lit up. During winters, eyes start burning and it becomes difficult to breathe," Rani said.

Experts have also pointed out that as Delhi faces its annual winter air pollution emergency, curbing open waste burning could prove to be a proverbial Achilles' heel. Data provided by Delhi Fire Services (DFS) control room shows that between September 15 and October 15, 127 complaints of open waste burning were received from across the city. Officials attending these calls said that some of these fires had turned unmanageable. In fact, over the last ten days five major garbage fires were put off by fire fighters.

On Sunday, the DFS received calls about 28 such fires. On October 11, a vacant plot near the Ashram intersection saw a major fire, which took over two hours to control. Similarly, on October 15, a fire was also reported from northeast Delhi's Bhajanpura. DFS officials said.

DFS chief, Atul Garg said, "DFS teams have been actively contributing to pollution control measures in the city. Apart from controlling the frequent garbage fires, our teams have also been sprinkling water on the roadside and open spaces to control dust."

Kripal Singh Ranawat, a shop owner near Bhajanpura police station, said waste collection and management is a major problem in these areas and some of the privately employed waste collectors often dump waste on road sides and on open plots and set it on fire.

"Fillers of flyovers and boundary walls are coated with soot, so if the agencies do not believe us they can see this as proof of how frequently burning happens in these areas," Ranawat said. DPPC control room data also shows that over the last 10 days, teams had to intervene at 52 places where open garbage burning was spotted. Officials said that while monitoring teams are on-ground monitoring such burnings, they are also relying heavily on complaints being received from resident welfare associations (RWAs) and the general public.

"Our teams are also patrolling areas in the night because waste is usually burnt at night," said a senior DPPC official.

In Dwarka, residents complained that vacant plots have been turned into dumping grounds and despite repeated complaints to the pollution control agencies and the local municipalities, waste burning continues.

"Garbage burning is common in Dwarka and in its surrounding areas. The (Winter)season has begun and the government must set up a 24x7 helpline for reporting garbage burning to control pollution. It normally happens in vacant DDA (Delhi Development Authority) plots, Karamvir Anil Parshar, activist and resident of Dwarka tweeted, along with pictures of smoke emanating from garbage fires.

Experts agreed that waste management is an area where authorities need to work harder. Anurag Roychowdhury, executive director (research and advocacy), Centre for Science and Environment (CSE), said waste management can be tackled with strict enforcement. "Waste burning is an offshoot of the larger problem of waste disposal and management. Agencies will need to step-up action not just during winters but all year long in order to control this," said Roychowdhury.

A senior official of the north corporation said that the agency is doing its best to control cases of open burning in their areas.

Delhi Jal Board has become new place of corruption -Yaseer Jilani HC

New Delhi/October 19

Corruption and irregularities in the Delhi Jal Board are constantly increasing, therefore, demanding the resignation of Delhi Jal Board Vice Chairman and Ann Aadmi Party MLA Raghav Chaddha, State Spokesperson Yaseer Jilani said that the Delhi Jal Board has become a new place for corruption of the Ann Aadmi Party.

Yaseer Jilani says that the irregularities and corruption in the Delhi Jal Board has increased ever since Ann Aadmi Party appointed Raghav Chaddha as Vice Chairman of Delhi Jal Board. Under the patronage of the Delhi Government, the Delhi Jal Board is working to loot Delhiites in collusion with tanker mafias. Yaseer Jilani said that no problems are being heard on helpline numbers of Delhi Jal Board. There is no response from the Delhi Jal Board on complaints of water, sewer, hills and illegal burning. The Delhi Jal Board still owes bill of crores of rupees. He said that 24 hours of continuous water is only delusion, in reality Delhi people are plagued with water scarcity. The plan to waive the water bill exists only on paper. Despite this, Ann Aadmi Party MLA Raghav Chaddha is in deep slumber. Adesh Gupta said that on the basis of morality, Raghav Chaddha should resign from his post otherwise Kejriwal government should be replaced for a mass movement in interests of Delhiites.

A 25-year-old man was killed after he fell on the ground while being assaulted allegedly by a group of people and a liquor bottle tucked in his trouser's pocket broke and pierced his thigh in east Delhi's New Ashok Nagar on Friday night, police said. Police said the victim was attacked after he allegedly used a toilet in a building without permission. The incident was captured in a CCTV camera installed in the lane where the man died, they said. A case of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under Section 304 of Indian Penal Code was registered at the New Ashok Nagar police station, said deputy commissioner of police (east) Jasmeet Singh.
